

Citizens for Change on Asylum Seekers

Manifesto

July 2015

2015 Manifesto

Citizens for Change on Asylum Seekers (CCAS) implores our politicians to give us leadership on the issue of refugees and asylum seekers. Community opinion has moved on and wants policies driven by humanitarian imperatives rather than the electoral needs of domestic politics.

The time is right to recognize there is a powerful movement of citizens from all walks of life who, regardless of their political persuasion, want an approach that promotes the true values of Australians.

An approach that does not accept locking innocent men, women and children away offshore, that does not accept the disastrous consequences of pushing back boats, but instead sees asylum seekers, not as a problem, but as an opportunity.

We are losing face around the world through our stop the boats policy. This needs to end if we desire to be one of the world's upstanding global players. We must not shirk the humanitarian responsibilities that we have agreed to. The current approach has cost thousands of lives and literally billions of dollars.

It is time to restore our reputation as a kind and friendly people who embrace equality and value a fair go. Too many of us now wish to extend our hand to those in need and to do so in a way that makes us proud to be Australian. To achieve this:

We beseech Australians to stop thinking of refugees as a problem but rather to see the opportunities they bring to enrich our nation through work, culture and the broadening of our horizons. We are concerned that Australia no longer has the humanity it possessed when we successfully brought nearly 100,000 Vietnamese to safety in the 1970s.

Australia needs to recognise the inhumanity of 'deterrence' policies. Australia would have to make conditions worse than those asylum seekers are fleeing to be effective. The Australian public must be given the broader facts about the billions being spent on offshore processing and border protection. Official estimates are that $475,000 per asylum seeker is spent each year to incarcerate innocent men, women and children on Nauru and Manus Island.

Detention of children irrefutably leads to serious harm. Their guardianship should be moved from the Immigration Minister to an independent guardian. In order for refugee children to become productive, well-adjusted citizens, no child should be kept in detention.

We need to cooperate internationally by facilitating increased protection of asylum seekers by fast and fair processing of claims without the use of punitive detention. During the determination process safety must be provided, along with access to education, employment and healthcare. As recommended by key organisations in this sector, we propose immediately increasing our refugee intake from 13,750 to 30,000, or to 15% of Australia's annual overall migration intake, which is currently 190,000.

It is necessary to place key emphasis on bolstering an Asia Pacific Regional Cooperation Framework, which requires Australia to collaborate multilaterally with the region's governments, the UN agencies, and the Regional Support Office in Bangkok to strengthen its operations and to demonstrate a genuine commitment to collaborate in the region.

The UNHCR's Regional Cooperation Framework as presented to the Bali Process should be actively pursued, ending mandatory offshore detention and strengthening local processing centres in neighbouring countries. A substantial number of places and clear and orderly pathways to Australia need to be established for those at risk of taking boat journeys from our immediate neighbours. This will guarantee the protection of asylum seekers, stop deaths at sea, make the 'turn back the boats' policy redundant, and see an end to offshore processing in Nauru and Manus Island.

Bi-lateral arrangements with poverty stricken countries to take our refugees must stop. The public needs to know that Cambodia's agreement to take up to 10 refugees from Australia and Nauru each year for four years is costing the Australian taxpayer $1 million per refugee.

Guarantees against refoulement (returning refugees to their country of persecution) are crucial. The public needs to be given a clear understanding that asylum seekers who come here for economic purposes, and are not escaping persecution, will be returned to their country of origin. Asylum seekers are not to be discriminated against by their mode of arrival and must have the right to work and to basic health and support services whilst on bridging visas. The public should be informed that only 1% of refugees in UN camps are ever able to be resettled. Those remaining might be there for generations.

The right to family reunion is essential to the well being of refugees. It will facilitate meaningful and productive contributions to our country. Processing centers should be established in rural parts of Australia where initial health, security and identity checks can be performed whilst allowing applicants to work and settle in these communities which are deeply in need of a stronger workforce.

Alternative pathways for refugees to seek asylum should be utilised. A skilled workforce agency could be used to screen applicants for 457 visas in countries of second asylum. Other visa categories should be established such as the Special Assistance Visa category for key populations in need of protection, for example war zones, with at-risk populations determined by a government-sponsored selection body.

The Community Proposal Pilot (private sponsorship of refugees) should be continued with these places being additional to the intake quota of 30,000. The practice of reducing the quota by the number of boat arrivals needs to end. Only Australia does this.

It is necessary that regressive amendments to the Migration Act and other pieces of legislation are removed to allow the country to move towards a more humane approach to asylum seekers. Accordingly, the Australian Border Force Act (constraining doctors exercising their duty of care), the Legacy Case Load Bill and the Protection and Other Measures Bill (which include reintroducing TPVs and removing babies to Nauru) need to be repealed, and the mainland should no longer be excised from the migration zone.

It is imperative that there be a reintroduction of references to the UN Convention for Refugees into the Migration Act, a vital tool to protecting the human rights of all asylum seekers and refugees.

We urge Australia to take a stronger, bolder, more humane approach to refugee laws in Australia, not only to uphold our status as a world-class leader of human rights, but to better represent who we are as a people.

Sincerely, CCAS members, and supporting citizen signees below:

CCAS are a collaboration of key highly informed, politically unaligned individuals and organisations who support a humanitarian response to asylum seekers.

Our politicians talk a lot about refugees but you never hear the words: "We're working on ways to end war and conflict so that the ever increasing number of refugees will be drastically reduced." It's about time we started hearing politicians talking in this vein.

...regards, Ian Chappell

G'day all at CCAS,

I would be proud to add my name to the list of concerned Citizens for Change on Asylum Seekers. As a Goodwill Ambassador for UNHCR, I have produced four documentaries on the plight of refugees. They did not appear to be opportunists or victims, they looked like heroes to me, seeking refuge and a better life for themselves and their families in the face of extraordinary odds. I regard our current policy as inhuman and cruel. As an Australian citizen I am ashamed of our government's policy regarding asylum seekers.

...Jack Thompson AM, PhD

The late Hon. Malcolm Fraser is acknowledged for initiating and having input to the work of CCAS.
His legacy will be remembered.

“I would be proud to have my name put forward in the effort to change the morally bankrupt path upon which we are now treading. I have close friends in the public service who also support the manifesto but who are forbidden to speak out in this world of secrecy and sewn lips we live in. Might there not be a memorial in the list of people, a symbol representing all those of good heart who are forbidden to speak freely in this land of free speech?”

“How I wish the worth and value of the principles expressed in the Manifesto could be understood and recognised by those who have the power to help us restore the pride we used to enjoy as being Australian. As it is, presently one can only weep when one sees the devastating actions being perpetrated in our name by those elected by our population to represent us with some sense of international statesmanship, dignity and humanity. These days, when travelling, I am hesitant and certainly ashamed to admit to my Australian heritage.”
